purchasing company intends to do with the property, and attempts to contact a spokesperson for CCC Real Estate Holding Co. were unsuccessful.

A Floyd County District Court judge had issued a decree of foreclosure in January this year, awarding Newtek Small business Financial more than $421,000, which included more than $335,000 in principal, $71,000 in interest plus legal fees and other costs.

The court also ordered a writ of possession, directing the sheriff to turn over the premises to the lender.

The Hartwood Inn had not held a valid hotel license since November 2021, according to the Iowa Department of Inspections and Appeals.

The facility continued to rent rooms – often to long-term guests – despite repeated state inspections citing unsanitary and hazardous conditions, including reports of pest infestations, lack of smoke detectors, soiled bedding, and human and animal waste in guest rooms.

Charles City officials had denied Starble's attempt to rezone the property for apartment use, and filed a civil case in August 2022 seeking penalties of $750 per day for code violations.

In December that year, District Court Magistrate Katherine Evans ordered Starble to pay the city $7,200 plus court costs. The total amount was $7,355. According to current court records that hasn't been paid.

In a letter to the Editor published in the Charles City Press on June 4, 2024, Starble apologized for what he said was his mismanagement, writing that his attempt to turn the motel into a refuge for vulnerable individuals was "misguided" and led to unlivable conditions.

"I let down neighbors, town officials, police, and guests through my mistakes," he wrote, while also expressing hope that a new owner could restore the site's reputation.

sanitary and storm sewers.

In other meetings, the council met with representatives from Hinson Consulting to begin its search for a new city administrator.

Brent Hinson and Marketa Oliver introduced themselves to the council and explained how they will interview council members and staff to determine what the city is looking for in an administrator and how they will recruit candidates for interviews.

"We want you to have a well-structured process," said Hinson.

City Administrator Diers has accepted a job in Clear Lake and intends to leave his Charles City position at the end of June. In the meantime, City Engineer John Fallis, who has been trying to retire for at least four years as the city looks for a replacement, has agreed to stay on the job to facilitate a smooth transition.

The council also received an update on the city's transit system from Tammy Elthon of Circle K Communications. One year into a two-year contract, Circle K is keeping busy providing transit service for the community. New technology like tablets that provide real-time tracking for buses and the adoption of a ticket system being well received by riders have been beneficial to the service.

On the other hand, the driver-present need for more drivers and demand for seats, particularly during the school year, are ongoing struggles for the company.

The council also approved a co-location agreement with WIN Fiber for the latter to continue to keep its equipment at City Hall and approved the second reading of a change to the Unified Development Ordinance to allow for the construction of more than one duplex on a lot in Kading housing development.
