DODGERS, Continued from Page 8

Grandors picked up his fourth win on the mound, working six innings with five strikeouts on 81 pitches. Kingley came in and needed just six pitches to finish things off for the save.

Royce Pederson slugged a home run and a double, going 2-for-3. Freshman brother Reggie Pederson drove in a pair.

“It was great that all four seniors played a key role in the wins,” Utley said. “Rylan comes on and closes game two out after Brayden finished off the opener. Royce hits a big home run, and Landen continues to always give us everything he has on the mound each time he steps out there.

“You couldn’t ask for anything more out of those guys.”

The Dodgers conclude the regular season on Tuesday at Webster City (12-15) beginning at 7 p.m. From there, they open Class 4A deal?... Was it jealousy? Was it all of the above?”

Hoping to find answers or at least insights into those questions, Brennan convinced her editor to let her cover six straight weeks of Clark’s first WNBA season, giving “On Her Game” a comprehensive feel, except for one thing: Clark never sat down for a one-on-one interview with Brennan. She did, however, answer every question Brennan posed at press conferences, and they are widely quoted throughout the book, along with all sorts of other Clark content like TV appearances and social media posts as well as interviews Brennan conducted with other WNBA players, coaches and various experts.

Brennan’s presence at Fever games, home and away, and her intense focus on Clark as a singular story became a story of its own in September 2024, when Brennan asked follow-up questions of DiJonai Carrington, a Phoenix Sun player whose fingers made contact with Clark’s eye during a playoff game. Brennan asked Carrington if there was anything intentional about it, she said no, and days later the WNBA Players Association called for Brennan’s media credential to be revoked for “unprofessionalism.” Ten months later, it’s a good bet only the most diehard sports journalism fans will care about that controversy. Brennan makes it very clear how she feels about it. “I was doing my job,” she writes.

Clark’s race and the frosty reception she got from some in the league is returned to again and again, with Brennan and the people she talked to asserting with incredulity that the WNBA wasn’t ready for all the attention.

“The league needed to do a better job in preparing... to take advantage of the tsunami of popularity that is raising all of the boats,” legendary civil rights activist Dr. Harry Edwards told Brennan.

Instead, Brennan cites example after example — from WNBA legends like Diana Taurasi and Sheryl Swoopes, to fellow female athletes like the WNBA’s Breanna Stewart — who made statements minimizing Clark’s impact.

It all makes for an interesting read and speaks to the divisive “us vs. them” moment the world finds itself in, but fans looking for tidbits about Clark that are not already part of the public record — how she learned to shoot like that, her on- and off-court life — will have to stay tuned to the current WNBA season. Clark’s Fever team is in the middle of the pack in the Eastern Conference, with their superstar having missed several games with a quadriceps injury. The playoffs begin Sept. 14.

who finished with 16 points, hit three of four free throws down the stretch to seal the win.

Former Bishop Garrigan star and Iowa State junior-to-be Audi Crooks scored four points in the final. Iowa Hawkeye post player Hannah Stuelke had seven points.

“It was a hard fought basketball game and we came up on the short end of it,” Brazil coach Pokey Chatman said. “I think the two areas that we wanted to focus on was the rebounding and we didn’t quite handle that and we needed to handle some of their pressure. They turned us over a lot that resulted in 22 points so we dug ourselves a little hole with that.”

Haliburton recently wrote on social media: “And honestly, right now, torn Achilles and all, I don’t regret it. I’d do it again, and again after that, to fight for this city and my brothers. For the chance to do something special.”

Pritchard told reporters Monday that Haliburton’s mentality “just shows you what kind of kid he is.”

“If you’re asking me, would I have him do it over and over? I would not. I would not,” Pritchard said. “If I knew that he was going to get hurt, I would sacrifice that game because I care for the kid so much and want him to have an incredible career.”

Pritchard also told reporters it was a surprise to lose Myles Turner in free agency to Milwaukee. Turner agreed to a four-year deal to join the Bucks, who waived All-Star Damian Lillard to make the acquisition happen.
