Smaller communities show strong support for print news

By a wide margin, print remains the medium of choice for readers in smaller communities, according to a survey by the National Newspaper Association and the Reynolds Journalism Institute at the University of Missouri.

About 75% of people in communities served by newspapers with circulation of less than 15,000 said they read a local paper at least once a week. Half said they never access local news online, even though most of them have broadband at home. They also prefer ads in print, with only 1 in 10 expressing preference for online.
